INTERNSHIP REPORT

My internship was with Service4StartUp between June 21 and August 4 of 2019. I was given the title of a 'Psychology Writer' which essentially entailed writing articles about developmental psychology. The Company was in association with another educational institute building an App for new parents. This app was aimed at simplifying of journal articles with extremely hard to understand and time consuming medical and psychological terminology. During the period of the six weeks that I was an intern at Service4StartUp, I wrote 9 articles for the application. My articles were about different topics as listed forward, fine and gross motor skills in infants, reflexes in infants, stranger and separation anxiety, emotions in infants, infants and peers, visual, smell, taste, auditory and gustatory perception in infants.

The tasks assigned to me helped me learn how to balance academics along with work. Moreover, they helped me develop a good sense of writing of articles of all kinds of formats and backgrounds. I also learnt how to coordinate with people in different locations and manage to finish the required work within time. I appreciated the different skills that I developed through experience which wouldn't have been possible otherwise. Since I had studied developmental psychology for a year, I had studied the subject and I got to apply it by helping other people understand and use the information for their benefit.
